

PRESS RELEASE

January 9th 2006

Ridley Fleming the professional services training and consultancy firm have relocated to new offices in Bledlow, Buckinghamshire as result of its significant client growth in recent years.

The need for new offices was driven by the firm outgrowing its Lymm premises and a need to have a location closer to their main client groups in London, central Europe and Ireland.

The new purpose built offices are situated in Bledlow, less than 40mins by train from London and only 30 minutes from London's Heathrow Airport.

Commenting on the move Peter Fleming, cites the firm's ambitions to remain at the forefront of business development training for the professions as a principal driver. Being more conveniently located for clients enables the firm to provide a more responsive and personal service. This coupled with recent investments in IT ensures the firm can enhance its service offering.

Kate Fleming founding partner and head of the firm's training faculty comments "In the modern world of technology it is often said that you no longer have to be visible to your clients, and that distance is immaterial. But our experience demonstrates that in addition to providing excellence in training delivery, clients need the personal and face to face inputs at the outset of any assignment, and this is where distance can be a barrier. Our new offices both in terms of facilities and location will ensure clients receive an even better service from the firm".
